A very interesting profile could be done because the story is so colorful.

Starting with the school teaching background with a few anecdotes that project a teacher's salary into billions is amazing to begin with.

Then the high profile work with major international figures. The Florida scandal giving your side of it-or-if that's too touchy then throwing it away as a set back to a career that continued in spite of it to the current life style which is fascinating. The properties and elaborate houses, the major charity work and patron to cutting edge science, the dinners at the New York mansion with you sitting around the dinner table in sweat suit hosting utterly weird combinations for dinner-a scientist, a politician, a representative from a foreign government, a magician, Broadway comics-all mixed together with any number of come and go guests of all types. Then off on a private plane the next day (with ex girl friend as pilot maybe) to advise some newly emerging nation on their economy.

All this paints a fabulously interesting picture of an amazing and totally unique life.

I can't imagine any journalist or writer of any sort passing up a chance to chronicle this.

If s friendly, on your side about the scandal issue-could be relied on then a fabulous documentary is also there.
