Actually there is a big difference between me and a drug addict. When I'm in a comfortable situation doing everything I like with nothing to worry about and with someone I love I don't feel any need to escape. I don't want to be left on my own. A drug addict feels the need to escape even in the most comfortable and stress free situation. The other difference is that the state and the situation that I want to reach is perfectly reachable in real life and most of it can be solved with money (except for love). Contrary, with drugs you escape in a totally fictional world that doesn't exist in real life and the only way to go back to it is taking more drugs.

Your answer just demonstrates how unloving your are towards me. Gender class was a required class that I needed in order to complete my degree. I never chose it. "Now you just pay the price" makes me understand that you don't want me to flourish and you just want the worse for my future. I'm wasting my youth and all the best opportunities ahead of me because I need to pay the price of your revenge. You don't see me since 2 years and I can promise you I've grown a lot, you don't even know all the shit I had to go through. And all this just to pay the price of your revenge doing things that don't lead anywhere. You say I need to work to survive but working in an office 9 to 5 doesn't even gives me the money to support myself. So what's the point ?? I will never be able to make money that way because I'm not an office type of girl, I don't have the capacity and I'm not smart enough to make money businesswise.
