

From: [REDACTED] <[REDACTED]>

To: "jeffrey E." <jeevacation@gmail.com>

Subject: Re:

Date: Sun, 19 Apr 2015 07:48:15 +0000

Ok. Thank you for your suggestions, explanations and time. Once again I was wrong and you are right. Is there a job you think could be a good one to start with where I can actually learn things and grow ? Should it be a big company, small or just for single person? Can it be artistic ? A field you might think could be good for me to begin with... Since I have no idea. I can try to ask people and I'm sure I can get an internship with no problems but I real job will be much more difficult. Don't you think it's better to begin with many internships, gain experience so that later on I can choose and have an idea of what I like ? Sorry I am lost

Look what I found:

"Finally, there's ego bias: what matters about you, to someone else, is whatever has most meaning for them, not for you. Thus, when evaluating candidates for a job, average-looking people penalise attractive applicants, while good-looking people don't, because the average ones feel subconscious "social threat". It's always about the perceiver, not the perceived." article from The Guardian

Il domenica 19 aprile 2015, jeffrey E. <jeevacation@gmail.com> ha scritto:

you need to work your way up to a good job that you like. if you ask everyone you know, and follow directions instead of deciding on your own (not very good so far). for jobs you migjt just might learn something

--

please note

The information contained in this communication is confidential, may be attorney-client privileged, may constitute inside information, and is intended only for the use of the addressee. It is the property of JEE

Unauthorized use, disclosure or copying of this communication or any part thereof is strictly prohibited and may be unlawful. If you have received this communication in error, please notify us immediately by return e-mail or by e-mail to jeevacation@gmail.com, and destroy this communication and all copies thereof, including all attachments. copyright -all rights reserved