[REDACTED] Based on my leadership potential and commitment to make a difference, I was awarded a [REDACTED] status in the frames of [REDACTED] ("") 2015. I represented the voices of Youth in [REDACTED] discussions with the Masters of today's world.

This year at World Economic Forum only 17% of the 2,500 attendees were women. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED], I listened to the speech of Christine Lagarde, the world most notorious woman advocate. Then, we shared the dinner table with her where she told me about her legal career which I have already known by heart. To interact with the world most smartest French lawyer, to learn from her and to hear her encouragements on my legal career, made me confident that one day I will do just as good as she did starting her career at Baker&McKenzie in 1981. It was probably even a more significant and life changing experience for me as a person than my participation in [REDACTED].

Tremendously inspired by the achievements of women global leaders and driven for legal success myself, I believe that an [REDACTED] will give me the unique knowledge of American business law and prepare me best for the [REDACTED] Bar exam, which I aspire to take in [REDACTED].

As I push hard on the envelope of my future, I can see myself being an international attorney, qualified in [REDACTED] and in the United States of America. I am passionate about law and public speaking. I know that logic makes an argument sound, but truly believe that a deep passion makes an argument sound logical. I wish to defend the best I can my clients at court, attempting to improve their lives. I believe that debating in a court is a form of competition. I grew up competing in [REDACTED]

[REDACTED]). In law, the competition of ideas and the search for compelling arguments require both skill and practice not unlike sports training. At trials, small changes make big differences, just as in sports tiny errors may lead to a tragic injury. The legal system and the world of sport look backward to precedent, though in sports we talk about breaking one's own records as well as the world's best. I visualize doing both. Being prepared for the unknown, ready to prove the cause of my client, I will follow the rules of the legal game and push to the edge of my intellectual limits - this time in the legal world. Law enables me to do intellectually what [REDACTED]

In my legal career so far, I have developed unique experiences in the intersection of banking and corporate laws with litigation. My work at top world law firms, [REDACTED] and other international companies sharpened my legal knowledge and prepared me for the success at your LL.M. course.

Throughout my legal work, the written communication in English, French and Russian was required on a daily basis. As such, my legal and finance language skills are on professional level. I have excellent common law knowledge thanks to my Juris Doctor studies at [REDACTED]. I have also successfully passed American Law

School Admission Test (LSAT) in 2011 with the ambition to complete my Juris Doctor at [REDACTED]. As such, my deep interest to study American law in one of the top Law Schools of your country was born 4 years ago and kept on growing. The opportunity to earn an LL.M. from [REDACTED] in the frames of my studies at [REDACTED] is a unique chance and at the same time a challenge which I desire to undertake.
