Hi... need some guidance.. We weren't able to get the cash for our house in Australia transferred before the exchange rate dropped well below .87 USD per AUD. It is now around .8-.81. We have $425K AUD there.. want to transfer eventually here to invest and also pay down some fraction of our US mortgage. Not in an urgent rush. Suggestions? I think the money is earning 4% or so in AUD while it sits there... Should we move it and take the 10% hit since Nov on the exchange rate, keep it there looking for an uptick, move it to some other intermediate currency that may rise?

Sorry, but I have no real understanding of what option might be best, and this is your area.. thanks for any advice, which will not be held against you later either way.. :)

p.s. spoke to the woman who I think would make an amazing Exec. Director for Origins Project as we ramp up.. you would like her. we'll see.
