APRIL 12, 2012

Get your thinking caps on. This week you'll have plenty to consider with a set of philosophy-inspired posters, a fictional narrative based on the real achievements of notable women, and a strategic game of knock-'em-down!

Wollstonecraft

by Airship Ambassador

 Category Children's Book

 Location Bellevue, WA

Wonder women

Inspired by his own literature-loving daughter, Jordan Stratford's Wollstonecraft is a work of historical fiction telling the story of two unsung women: Ada Byron, the world's first computer programmer, and Mary Shelley, the world's first science fiction author. The resulting tale mixes math and science with mystery and adventure, transforming Ada and Mary into young detectives who must use their smarts to save the day.

Philosophy Posters

by Max Temkin

 Category Graphic Design

 Location Chicago, IL

Word to the wise

Max Temkin has had a thing for philosophy ever since he encountered a Nietzsche poster in the 8th grade. For years he's mulled over the idea of redesigning that poster to be more visually appealing, and now he's kicking off a complete series of philosophy posters featuring notable thoughts from thinkers like Camus and Wittgenstein. Each print will be handmade, signed, and numbered, and hopefully inspire some philosophical thinking of your own.

Knock Down Barns - You Can Always Build Again

by Greg Burhop

 Category Board & Card Games

 Location Chicago, IL

Knock your socks off

Knock Down Barns pits friends and family members against one another in a battle of build-and-break. Players compete to build the sturdiest structure out of wooden blocks, then attempt to destroy their opponents with miniature catapults. The last person standing wins! The game's newest edition will be made of sustainable bamboo, and first-run copies are available exclusively to backers.
