Jeffrey,

Every single topic you list is fascinating. For the "differential geometrist" you mention for the power laws gathering, I'd like to suggest David Donoho. He was my advisor and, along with Danny Hillis, the best scientific thinker I know. He is also a MacArthur genius grant awardee (at age 34) and is the most highly cited author in mathematics. As is common for the best academics he is not a self-promoter. He deeply understands information theory, shannon, and ran a hedge fund at RenTech for a couple of years about 4 years ago.

In my work with him we studied power laws, especially in the context of internet traffic. Much of his early work centered on robustness, which is also a way of understanding limitations of the normal distribution. His understanding of this area is very deep.
