great I'll try later, , thoughts. I'm beginning a study of a process we name evolutionary code dynamics. Its not genetic algorithms, or cryptography. IT involves the natural creation of deception in codes.. genetic algorithms look to optimize the result. evolution does so but generates many solutions designed to fool the opponent,.. Most gene research is focused on what gene relates to what trait.. Here the code is seen as much more sophisticated , creating false vulnerabilities to trap the enemy, (viruses). from butterflies to fish to flowers. deception , camouflage , is part and parcel of its growth. This can be seen in an entirely new light. making sometimes the survival of the fittest, somewhat largely dependant on the perceived weaknesses in the system.. Its a subtle but substantial difference,the weak are intentionally made weaker by and for the survival of the fittest. Trivers has great insight into some aspect f this,, but not codes.
