My boy

I thought I should tell you that Dad has shuffled from this mortal coil. In many respects his last day was a remarkable end to a remarkable life. He'd been sick for 5 years but during the last two had slipped away completely into a world of his own only emerging to be as vile as is possible to imagine to his incredibly saintly Bajan nurses. He had also prior to this become rabidly Dawkinesque subjecting any and all who came to him in the name of spiritual enlightenment to sustained abuse. The last morning he awoke in a very happy mood (virtually unheard of) asked his nurses all of whom are devout Christians to pray for him and began by praying for forgiveness for all his sins which apparently he admitted to being many and multiple he then prayed for each member of his immediate family by name lay down on his bed with a look of complete serenity and voila was gone. Certainly the passing of an era.

Hope to see you v soon.

Lots of love
