 This Week on Kickstarter

JUNE 14, 2012

This week we've got some ladies whose style is as advanced as their age, a study on life after the Olympics, and a glossy new magazine about the world's favorite sport.

Going for the gold

What happens to Olympic cities after the games are gone? Filmmaker Gary Hustwit (Helvetica, Urbanized) and photographer Jon Pack team up to examine the legacy of the Olympic Games on the people and communities that are left behind. They'll capture the spectacle and decaying grandeur of six former Olympic cities, all bound into one beautiful art book.

Howler: A Magazine About Soccer

by George Quraishi

 Category Journalism

 Location Brooklyn, NY

Score!

Howler is a new soccer magazine aimed specifically at North American fans, but enjoyable to anybody who loves the sport. Helmed by a team of industry veterans, this quarterly publication will be filled with original art, writing, and design about soccer, soccer, and — did we mention? — soccer.

Senior starlets

Getting old doesn't have to mean going out of style. Based on the popular street-style blog of the same name, Advanced Style is a documentary following the daily lives of New York City's most fashionable grand dames. Not your typical seniors, these ladies challenge our commonly held notions of age and beauty while living life to the absolute fullest. Inspired!
