its offensive , but falls short of assault i think.. i believe we will be more like japan soon, outside face and inside thoughts. keeping a peaceful appearance may become a priority when evryone is so angry

I agree. But that is chivalry not assault... I think whistling, grabbing, etc would be more under assault territory. There's not much else I can think of besides men verbally degrading women in a work or academic setting

[REDACTED], says she prefers a double standard to make up for the past . still open the door and pay for dinner but dont grab her ass or whistle at her. however i pointed out that those construcion workers if they were on a boat would still say women and children first. maybe its a tradeoff ? :)

Good question...

I have to think about it. What do you think?

Ive been thinking of your " catcalls as verbal assault " . What other abuses, do you think many men have previously ignored? .
