I am really trying to work with them. We've been through basic things over and over an I'm sorry to say they just can't absorb any new information. They've been doing the same thing for 20 years and its seems to me almost impossible to break these habits.

Example- asked Lynn to NEVER make the smoked salmon platter for breakfast again 2 months ago, told her its not what we serve to the guests and I will take care of all thing food related. Sure enough I walk in tues morning to make breakfast and there it is!! The smoked salmon and sable with tomato and dill platter she worked on all morning. A waste if time and smoke fish...

I certainly could have stayed in the kitchen lat night all night and I apologize for being downstairs I was getting ready all the stews and short ribs and jerky for your departure this evening and wanted to have it done by time I left last night.

It's like everyday we go through things and then the next day we just start from scratch again. If I could get through to them everything would be so simple

Christina, my girlfriend, has off this tues and weds. Ill hold a training class on one if those days and see if this helps. I will explain to them this is a mandatory training course and they must be there.
