Do I take it from this that you're providing support for David? I don't know him personally, but I've known of his admiration for Popper for many years, know his older book, The Fabric of Reality, and have had his new one sitting as next to be read after the one I've just finished. I find the pluriverse notion hard to accept (doesn't it mean an infinity of universes branching in infinitely many ways at almost infinitesimally small intervals?) but constructor theory sounds gigantic and appealing (and indeed as he says incorporates a notion at the core of Popper's thought). I have been thinking for some time I will certainly interview him next time I'm in England.
