Thank you so much!

However, I decided not to fly unless absolutely necessary e.g. if I get retinal detachment between now and Thursday I do not have any option but to fly!

And Bill offered to pay.

If I fly and by any chance pressure drops (mechanical failure or whatever) my eye will turn into popcorn in the microwave. It will burst. Not only that I will immediately irreversibly lose it but it will be incredibly painful. Some risks I am willing to take, this one is not the one.

With my eyes I had every possible complication during last 6 weeks – My bleeding was a worst complication of neovascularization, my detachment was a worst compilation of bleeding and Lucentis. Also I got a macular hole and epiretinal membrane as a consequence of detachment. Now I am developing Posterior Vitreous detachment as a consequence of Lucentis injection into left eye. Etc. Thus, I simply can't take any more risk unless no other option.
