All the quants have performance. The issue is what they can show you versus speak to because in many cases Millenium (izzy) or a bank prop desk owned the record. The manager would leave and have to rebuild the model. All the managers can and will talk to the prior performance. Obviously one year of performance on a higher frequency model is statistically more relevant than a fundamental fund with few trades per month or year. I wanted you to meet the managers to get a feel. The Millenium model fires or "trades out of" managers relatively quickly if they do not perform, so the pool of managers changes.

These results may be based on simulated or hypothetical performance results that have certain inherent limitations. Unlike the results shown in an actual performance record, these results do not represent actual trading. Also, because these trades have not actually been executed, these results may have under- or over-compensated for the impact, if any, of certain market factors, such as lack of liquidity. Simulated or hypothetical trading programs in general are also subject to the fact that they are designed with the benefit of hindsight. No representation is being made that any account will or is likely to achieve profits or losses similar to these being shown.

Past results are not necessarily indicative of future results.
