Peter,

I've enclosed a link to the concept basics. In the real world, many people of good intentions but little practical knowledge have tried multiple approaches. At the core, if one distills away the excess, is government tax policy (money laundering, barter etc) and a trust actor. 99% of the past attempts do not use today's tech, -silly. With the right formula, it has the potential to be the most disruptive advance since personal computers.

I've cc'd Richard on this, but recognize it is in your court.
