I will find you something after i put out today's fires. Different treatment in different states so you would likely need to be doing case law research. Tis topic is not my specialty area but I am pretty sure in NY you breached your promise if you don't go through with the wedding and you have to return the ring which was given to you in exchange for your promise.

I can find no authority that says that an engagement ring is a conditional gift based on contract law. IT is a conditional gift. pure and simple no contract law applies at all. unless you can find a ruling that I may have missed. he is not receiving anything in return for the ring.
