bad day today.. don't have the spirit or energy to spar.. it is not a choice.. and by the way, it was his 'popular book' with infeld on physics that was one of my inspirations.

you asked me for emails.. I gave them a few to you.. I cannot help that whenever I lecture people want to hear it and learn from it.. I cannot help that I can explain things well.. I cannot help that I get a kick out of coming up with new ways to understand things that are explicable.

einstein did it by his ideas. his lectures sucked and inspired no one. his work spoke for itself. , arthur c clarke, was a performer, you choose.

maybe not.. but it is one use.. it is also easy for me, and also it seems that exciting good young people to do science is one of the things professors can and should do.. I just do it globally instead of in a classroom.

Hey, Lawrence! Forgive me if this is an inappropriate medium to contact you through. I was looking for an email and was directed to the ASU homepage. I just wanted to send a quick message saying thank you for inspiring me to pursue a career in science and specifically theoretical physics. I'm 16, and a junior in high school and your research is answering the questions I've always had about the universe and the outer reaches of space. I also want to thank you for being an advocate for the 'War on Religion' if you will. I, myself, am an Atheist and where I live that is a very unpopular view to have, however, its people like you, Dawkins, and others that let people like me know that we're not alone with that view and like-minded, much more educated people, are out there with the same one. I think your work is inspiring and I just wanted to tell you how big of an inspiration you are to me. Thanks again! -Owen Finch
