the system needs to be changed, i have said this for weeks now. the last two times you wanted to " tune " it, it hasn't worked. the idea that you thought that a buzz was ok, i found difficult. to understand, that being said i will meet you on friday of course and appreciate your help. we need alternate solutions not an equalizer adjustment on a class d digital switching amp that no one in their right mind uses for music,

No, I am not asking you to accept a boat stereo and I remain steadfast in my desire to make you happy.

We presented options for a more robust system that required additional power from the aircraft and required a $20k plus converter. This system was about $115k.

When you presented car audio into the equation, we designed a system that would sound great and perform efficiently given the aircraft and financial parameters.

At this point in our relationship I consider you a friend and since the goal at hand is to try and make you happy, I humbly suggest that we work together on a solution rather than texting flippant remarks that do not provide any measureable insight to the sound quality that you are really after.

In order to move forward, I am requesting that you give us some time on Friday when you arrive. We are flexible and can meet you as early and as long as you want in order to identify and agree on a direction that will make you happy.

Your thoughts...?

No - you called me twice this morning and I wanted to take a bit of time to think my thoughts through before presenting them to you.

I am in the middle of writing you an e-mail regarding the entertainment system that I will send to you shortly, then we should talk.
