Not sure I understand..

I would be interested to see if he knows the current consular officer in Slovakia - Matthew Pierson.

On an unrelated note and purely out of curiosity - I wonder if and how the UN (and you) think about EMP attacks and the potential implications...

no question more adrenaline - but more of a physical challenge. . my idea was to insert you into a almost deal entity and have you grow inside. . much longer , harder , usually more rewarding over the long term. . but i understand your view. Im having dinner with the slovak guy again today. any ideas?

Ha, that made me smile.. Why do you think I'm expecting new challenging experiences in my apt?

Yes I love new challenges and surrounding myself with smart, eccentric people with big ideas, in both my personal and professional life. Coincidentally, one of those just called and asked me to work for his company here in ny. He is building solar-powered perpetual flight drones and airplanes to provide internet in remote areas, also invented a new way to make composite materials and is building some crazy flying things for Darpa. I could be the chief pilot on his jet and a test pilot for the experimental toys. I just visited the company and deciding if I should do it. The test flying is no joke...certainly a tempting challenge and learning opportunity compared to 'driving a bus' for a discount airline, but risky. :) I also can't leave the country so if I wanted to try the airline world, it would need be here instead of Europe. There is a new pilot shortage so they are all going to have issues finding enough qualified pilots soon...at least until pilots are no longer needed at all..

PS: Did you think the last video I sent was fake?
