Regarding tomorrow call with Leah at 10:30am:

she will call you (as required) at [REDACTED]

call will be recorded and then leah will print transcript which you will have to then sign and notarize

leah explained sole purpose of the call was the 4 loose diamonds and patek watch that was lost when the kite house blew away
(all of diamonds are on pages 28-36 of 3rd PDF at the bottom of this email)

anna explained to leah on her site visit that the 4 diamonds and watch were in your kite house jewelry box along with patek watch.

anna also explained that each of your bedrooms had a jewelry box leah asked why loose diamonds were not secured and anna explained that no one other than anna was allowed in your personal space and probably all employees had no idea they were even there.

anna explained that diamonds were at that location as you contemplated making a piece of jewelry for your girlfriend..

Dear Rich,

Further to our phone discussion earlier this week, we are returning a copy of the claim inventory with our comments specifying the additional information we need to identify the destroyed and discarded items better.

We also added color coding to the list. The items shaded green are items we believe will be easiest to resolve based on the information you recently provided. We suggest trying to address the outstanding information on these items first (note many of these items require action from our side). Once we have the details for the green items, we should be in a position to request a partial settlement.

The items that have no color coding are items still lacking substantive descriptions. If the photographs you have already provided depict any of these items, please let us know.

For the items highlighted in purple, McLarens needs to demonstrate to the carrier these objects meet the definition of fine art under the policy. The policy defines fine arts as "paintings, etchings, statuary and other bona fide works of art, historical value or artistic merit". It is particularly important to supply as much information as possible about the creators or manufacturers of these items.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Kind regards,

Leah Hutton | McLarens
