or have a put of our interest back to them at the fair market price.

- Jihan is a strong businessman. He makes some mistakes I think, but he undoubtedly has built a major business.
- Bitmain also plans to court AI, which justifies a greater valuation in the future even if the crypto mining market becomes more competitive
- If/When it IPOs, it will be the best way for people who don't want to own bitcoin/crypto to get exposure to cryptocurrency.

I think it is a great company to nab some exposure to, and I think we should do it.

- They are going to send a summary of governance structure for the partnership and what happens to the shares
- Very open on governance of the LLC and can negotiate the fees with them
- technically they need a commitment by mid day tomorrow but they are trying to push it to end of the day on Friday
- we would basically have no voting rights on the company itself

Now on the company itself, the main concerns (some of the notes are mine) are:

- 1) No idea about about the future cash from asics sales because demand fluctuates widely based on crypto prices
- 2) not entirely clear what they need the money for given what they already have on the balance sheet
- 3) They don't know what the capex is
- 4) Revenue split: 97% sales of asics and 3% is mining. "Traditional" players are allegedly getting into the market on the asics side and obviously if the hashing functions change their inventory could become worthless

Positive facts:

The revenue growth is stellar

The series B was done by Dst/GIC/sequoia and sequoia led their A

They are allegedly going to file the equivalent of an S-1 in August

If you are long crypto their balance sheet is very strong and they have investments in other companies in the space as well (Eg: circle)
