Importance: normal

They can, especially if it's the Coast Guard who interdicts them.

Depends who they strike, one of the federal officers, then it's a violation of US Code, so we would be processing the individual, if they struck anyone else, the AUSA would have the first right of refusal, but if they decline, we can call the locals.

If they then claim asylum, we would begin the process for removal and hand them over to either ICE or the locals.

Yes, port of entry laws are based on the home country, but they're all basically the same.

The port of entry is where they claim asylum, but they can also claim it "in country".

What exactly do you mean by prosecuted? Prosecuted for criminal activity at the POE? Or processed for removal?

I was just remembering our conversation with Woody Allen and I just wanted to say thanks. It's always cool to get into a discussion with someone of his reputation.

So like I said, thank you.

See you soon.
