Though even taking payment out of the equation, I still don't quite understand why you would do an internship instead of getting a position.

I'll rephrase. Doing an internship after the bachelors seems to be for people who are not ready to get a full job. (I'll admit that this is for most). Is there really a difference between getting the experience before or after getting the degree? Getting it after the degree means I would get paid more. I'm going to assume (and correct me if I'm wrong) these internships would not pay as much as even a standard post bachelors technical job

I'll also note; why would I get an internship with a bachelors in hand? Most people do internships in college.... not after.
