Dear Jeffrey,

I hope that this email finds you well.

I am reaching out (once again) concerning [REDACTED] the start-up that I am working on parallel to my PhD work. [REDACTED] is a social enterprise with the ambition to address skills and job mismatches in Sub-Saharan Africa.

We are currently trying to do everything we can to attract funding (hopefully before I move to Nigeria in February). As a social enterprise, we are both trying to seek grant funding and/or VC/angel investment.

May I kindly, very kindly ask, do you know anyone who might be interested to invest in a startup in Africa, or anyone who is giving grants to enterprises addressing educational challenges in Africa?

I am very sorry to bother you again, but I really need any help I can get. (I spoke with Barbro the other day). I truly and fully believe in [REDACTED] and its potential, hence I am persistent... I deeply hope that you do not take it badly.

I am attaching updated financial projections and a pitch deck.

If you would be interested, I would be happy to meet you at any time/place the most convenient to you.

If I can do anything for you – please do not hesitate to let me know.

Again, I hope that you are well.

With warmest wishes,
[REDACTED]
