yes. that is what I had suggested after I worried about the possible disparagement thing.. but if the retirement letter is framed as a request for Crow to do something, and also having the purpose of safeguarding the rest of the ASU community, then I agree with Nancy they can't really do anything, and if they release it, the news gets out. If we do 2 letters, then I am not sure the letter with content will get out in the media.

In any case, I will send you both versions to look at and you can help decide.

actually it was in their original statement and we thought it got removed as a typo.. anyway, I am not sure this is strong notice, as the University has refused to release documents in the past and also also held onto such requests for over 8 months before responding to them. In any case I am now working on the two different versions, so we can assess whether we want to send one letter or two. As I haven't received the signed contract yet, the time pressure is somewhat relaxed..

Ah. Hadn't see it.

I don't think it changes your plan for a single letter if that letter explicitly states and demonstrates your intent to share truths and concerns for the express purpose of protecting others. And if ASU wants to hang you for doing that, then let them try with the public watching.

To the extent that your client is concerned that the statement alone suggests he is leaving immediately, you should keep in mind that we are likely to need to release the agreement and your client's resignation letter at or near the time we make the statement, because of the pending public records requests and the ones we may get in response to the statement itself. So to the extent the press gets the shorter statement, they will get the full picture.
