that's why online is always now best if you can navigate your way through. funny but there are 3 suicides in every freshman class at Harvard. why? some of the students in your classes realize their place in the hierarchy and can't deal

I'm (unofficially) teaching a graduate class at SMU and I haven't done anything that I consider graduate level. In fact, I've done more 2000 level material than anything else. However, I constantly get complaints that this is the hardest class they've ever taken. Have people gotten dumber or is it just intimidating to have a 20-year-old kicking your ass?
