Hi Jeffrey,

Thanks for taking the time to meet with me last week. You definitely have an interesting world view and life story.

If you can point me to the research you mentioned on top thinkers having statistically higher than average % of blue eyes, and the other associations regarding race and intelligence (blue eyed Ashkenazi's, Africans, etc.), I would be very interested in seeing it. Thank you.

Of course I will interpret it in the distorted way the plants controlling my brain dictate ;)

Regarding the formal epistemology and non-relativistic ethics I mentioned:

This work is presented as the first part of a formal system of metaphysics (epistemology, ontology, and semiotics codeveloped in a way that addresses bootstrap issues)...that clarifies what is meant by subjective, objective, and the relationship between the two...and the patterns of relationships between those ontological categories...in a manner that supports a better formalization of the philosophy of science (3rd person epistemology) as well as the derivation of a congruent system of ethics (principles of 1st person/ 3rd person relationship).

Given that it is working deeper in the stack than the epistemic tools we usually use to vet truthfulness, the process must be testing its internal validity first, then soundness mappings, and exploring the clarifying/reifying power of the concepts to otherwise known but under-formalized domains.

In other words, it will probably seem like gibberish :)

Regarding my contention for the need for foundational restructuring of human coordination systems, this is the briefest statement of the problems I can share:

Thanks,

Jeffrey, Daniel,

Connecting you here. There're very few people in the world whom I respect as much as I respect each one of you. You both are amazing thinkers and world-changers.

I'm excited to connect you. Please meet when Daniel is in New York on Sept 18-25.
Adding [REDACTED] to facilitate scheduling.

Much love,
Masha
