Jeffrey,

I'm certainly no boat expert, but judging from the photos,

The cracks are limited to the super structure of the boat, the HULL is built in a mold, the super structure is then molded to the hull, which appears were the cracks are forming, with no photos of cracking in the HULL, it appears to be sound.

cause: maybe taking big swells at high speed? Causing a flex in the hull, which cracked the super structure is only an uneducated guess. We know Finerglass flexes, something has to give when hitting a large swell.

To say the boat is cracking in Half is a stretch maybe, these cracks need to be repaired, if you think the boat is worth the effort?

I'll fwd to Richard at the fiberglass shop in Fort Lauderdale for his opinion if you like? Insurance claim??

The surveyor that inspected the boat when we purchased, made a comment, the Hull is thick, solid and should take big waves, since designed as used by the coast guard and Sheriff dept. during its inception.

The obvious weak point is the super structure / Cabin,,

I know the Floor that was installed was over engineered and very solid, I'm sure these cracks didn't happen over night,

I'll fwd these photos to Richard in FLL for a professional evaluation.

Rich, would this be an insurance Claim due to failure of the boat structure? Just a long shot

Thx

Larry

Hey Bossman,

I'm not sure if you've already been aware of the Nautica Boat but Randy said the Nautica Boat is cracking in half and its very dangerous.

He said we shouldn't be using it because the Cabin is breaking away from the outside deck and its not safe.
