I dont need to remind you that you are behind the eight ball . if you are going to benefit from here I suggest succinct answers. that is why justin wants you prepped. it needs to be , im sending you a note as the typo might have led to a misunderstanding. . I would ask that you read the blogs of the accuser. and I assume that as she is the main player , I would like to know who will reprsent her at the conciliation. !!! lets put it on thompson. ask if the university will fund her airfare . etc. play dumb

Thanks.. Will be framing some of these in the next day or two. In the meantime, I am considering the attached, which, while a small point, is not irrelevant, and would by itself not have warranted sending them a note, but since I sent the OEI the note today about new evidence, it seems not useless, or desperate, to clarify this point.

Arguing, even to faculty members, the relevance of prematurely leaked, proposed-but-not-enacted regulations smacks of desperation to me. It's what you do if you know you have nothing else. If you have questions about how the conciliation process works—I certainly do—I think it would be good to ask them. But don't drag this whole issue into it. You will look desperate and weak.

ahh.. but these are faculty, not administrators, and they will not fail to see which way the wind is blowing.. and this gives them an out if they want to suggest keeping me.. faculty of course would have to convince the university of this, but it will be good to remind them of what is happening when I talk to them I think.. but that will await the hearing.. IN the meantime, It will be good to ask at some point, to get their specific answer.. I am going to compile a few questions to ask them about this process..

That's easy—they won't. This is a notice of proposed rulemaking the hasn't even been announced yet. It will be months and months before a final rule is issued, as it has to go through a long "notice and comment" period first. In the meantime, nothing changes.

interesting.. look forward to seeing it.. One of the things we will want to ask about the conciliation process at some point is if the new rules will apply..

Yeah, [REDACTED] working on an op-ed about this tonight. The proposed rules aren't as good for the accused as [REDACTED] hoped, but we'll see.

BREAKING NEWS

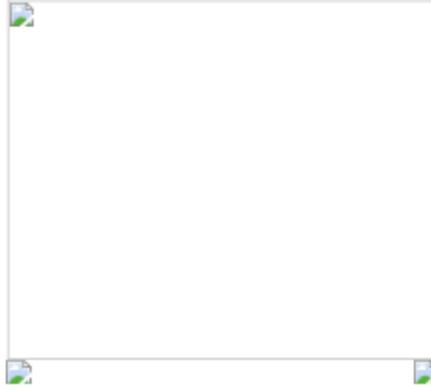

Education Secretary Betsy DeVos will propose new campus sexual misconduct rules that bolster the rights of the accused and protect colleges.

Wednesday, August 29, 2018 4:30 PM EST

The proposed rules, obtained by The New York Times, narrow the definition of sexual harassment, holding schools accountable only for formal complaints filed through proper authorities and for conduct said to have occurred on their campuses. They would also establish a higher legal standard to determine whether schools improperly addressed complaints.
