Hi [REDACTED],

As discussed, unfortunately it looks likely that Yahoo story is going to go ahead and publish a story and we think they will likely name you.

[REDACTED] At this point we'd suggest you consider taking independent advice - especially before considering commenting or responding to Yahoo or any other media.

The press office is following this closely and we will keep you informed if we have any additional information we can share.

Best, Jeremy

Dear

Very sorry that you continue to be dragged into this salacious rumormongering.

This reporter contacted our Press Office and indicated last week that he had some 2016 correspondence to the Board Ethics Committee. As you know the Board Ethics Committee thoroughly reviewed the allegations and found no reason to pursue them further – the reporter has been made aware of that.

The advice from the World Bank communications team would be to not respond to such inquiries. He has brought no new information to us that we could respond to.

I will bring this to the attention of the Corporate Secretary who is also the Secretary for the Board Ethics Committee for her awareness, given the reporter references emails to the committee.

Once again, I'm very upset that this is causing you such distress.

My best,

Sheila

Dear [REDACTED],

I'm investigating Dr. Jim Kim's tenure at the World Bank for Yahoo News. In the course of that investigation, I have been provided correspondences from senior WBG officials to the bank's board ethics committee. In several of those correspondences, you are significantly referenced. Because my goal is to conduct the most thorough investigation possible, I would like to speak to you [REDACTED] so that I have the most accurate version of events possible.

Thank you.

Alexander
