[REDACTED], I'd like for the three of us (my editor Sharon is copied here) to talk tomorrow morning. You asked, in your previous email to me, what questions I wanted to pose. That's difficult to do without first explaining what this article is about, and why we are coming to you. I'm not trying to be reticent; I just don't think sending questions without context is a great idea.

Broadly, however, we want to know about the workings of [REDACTED] I think that would be the natural start of a conversation.

We'd love to talk at your earliest convenience, tomorrow morning if possible.

Thank you again for working with us on this.

Alex
