You can set up a business making draw string purses out of the mastectomies.

I would like for Eva to speak to this lady to see if there is any mutually beneficial aspect to this. [REDACTED] team can get clinical data, and the Sudan lady can get some help financially or just making the getting of equipment/supplies easier. Eva can also get some really good PR for doing work with this place. Street cred in Khartoum. The lady was a very successful doctor in London, her husband made money in the finance world, so she decided to do some good in Sudan ( I think she is Sudanese). She has really gone through some challenges to make and keep this all happening. No downside.

Are you still in touch with Eva? When I was in Dubai last week I met with a woman Doctor that opened a breast cancer screening/treatment center in Sudan over 10 years ago. She was saying that she has lots of data that would be important that the medical community should have access to. One of the things she was finding there was that women in their 30's that have had 3-4 kids, that would normally be protected from cancer due to the childrearing, are getting breast cancer at higher rates than you would expect. They could also use some help with medicines etc.

If Eva is interested, I can put them in touch.

If you're not in touch with her I will reach out.

Thanks

Looks like my latest offer was accepted for another boat.
