can I ask for a brief business advice? when you see an opportunity and want to invest in company and they don't seem like that want your investment would you still push them to take your money?

I have one mentor who says: if investor sees the mountain ahead of him he'd turn opposite direction (an entrepreneur would climb on it or dig a tunnel etc).

I'm a little confused what to do because I have a tendency to make people do what I want but it might be not the best approach for an investor.

What do you think? Have you ever forced people to take your money?
