Hi Jeffrey,

I've given your interests in the stranger aspects of my PNSE research a lot of thought while here in India. You seem to get sued a lot, and I don't like documents showing up in discovery processes. I've written up my thoughts on what you're interested in, created an account on a secure email service, and had that account send an email to itself. That's about as safe as information transfer gets in our age. To read it, just log into the same account. I'll send you the username via Skype so the full login isn't in one message or system. Please don't forward it or save a local copy.

You can find it here:

Email Account Username: [REDACTED]
Email Account Password: [REDACTED] 5

When you've reviewed it enough, just delete the message. I'll come along later and close the account.

Much Love,
Jeffery

Hi Jeffrey,

I've been thinking of you and your quest for an experience that can lead to a mechanism. Qigong isn't surprising, given Shin Lin's frustrations with his research in that area. What other things have you tried to find it with? Any similar projects? I assume probably the equally unimpressive parapsychology world, at a minimum. Also, who were the 40 or so people you've tried so far? Ballpark is fine more than a list, though if you have kept a list that is okay to. I'm just trying to get a sense of the dry holes dotting your landscape so far.

Much Love,
Jeffery
