I just spoke to him a few minutes ago.

The CPA gave her all the documents relating to Sublime. Apparently one of the very first things that she asked for was also AS's personal bank statements. The CPA just said that the bookkeeper was unaware that those were needed and only provided the Sublime documents.

When the auditor left yesterday (around 3 pm), she said there was too much to go through in one day and that she would have to schedule another visit. She also said that she was going to fax over a list of additional documents that she will need. The CPA is expecting this today. When he gets it, he will send a copy, which I'll forward to you. She (the auditor) is not available today so the CPA will speak to her tomorrow, most likely to set up another date, but giving us enough time to pull together what we need.

He sees the big conflict as this: on AS's personal bank statements, the gift deposits clearly show that they are from LB. LB also happens to be Sublime's major client and his name is also on invoices for artwork and the art consulting contract.

As soon as I have the document list request, I'll forward it on.
