From the woman I put in charge of helping Joscha. Seems like he's depressed and needs help. Is it OK to ask you to pay for her fees? I had to cut her off when we took Joscha off of MIT payroll.

> Thanks for sending this Joi. I was going to write you tomorrow about Joscha - Karthik sent me a text that Joscha was "succumbing to depression" and that "he's convinced the world would be better of without him". So he's having those types of ideations again. He & I did 8 sessions in Sept. and October & I feel it was helping to stabilize him and support him through this very tough transition. I feel he needs the support right now. Although he's expressing to you that he's 'basically fine' - without going into details, I can tell you that he's not - from what I know about him, he's just not being candid with you.

> Joscha & I left it that per your suggestion, he should reach out to Jeffrey and either mention you or cc you in the email (expressing to Jeffrey that he could no longer have the coaching sessions with me through the Media Lab and requesting an arrangement be made so he could continue). My sense is that he's afraid to 'rock the boat' and ask Jeffrey for this - so I don't think he's done anything on that front. I planned on writing him tomorrow as well, and suggest we have a touch-in call - but he needs more than a conversation. In Sept. and Oct. he was doing really great work with me - more present, calm, open & receptive to growth & transformation since he was off the Adderall.

>>> Dear Joi, it was a tough year, but I am basically fine! Please don't worry about me. Thank you for your concern and your offer of help. One of my biggest issues is being isolated from my former community at the Lab, but there is probably little you can do for me, in the current situation.
