You're very sweet. I'm probably the only person who's told you that. ;) I'm trying not to think about it and trying to have a healthier way of dealing with it which is to put it out of my mind because there's nothing I can really do about it. If I think about it it's too painful.

The issue with Sinai is laziness on their part. Not complicated. Me not participating in insurance is clearly not the norm for them. They are used to doctors losing money on insurance and having more control over the doctors. My medical practice is called "high revenue, non participating". Sinai can handle this, and should encourage more doctors to do the same. My model allows for personalized care and how I think medicine should be practiced. It allows more doctor patient interaction where I actually listen to patients. You following?

Decongestants are the real culprits. Claritin is ok, not perfect. If you need it, take it, but obviously without the "D". Stop hollering.

Tewari and I have both agreed that I would establish a concierge practice at Mount Sinai and be the director of microsurgery. This is exactly what I do now at NY Hospital. We have been at this dance for 2 years. The hold up is only the hospital administration.

the cialis, makes the stream better. is it correct to conclude that it is not a stricture since the mechanics would not change. but a bladder opening constriction?

Stream is better likely because the effects of the decongestant is wearing off. Cialis also helping the prostate. You are correct sir (Ed McMann reference just in case you are not following). My bet regarding a structure is if you do have a stricture, it is probably small and not causing a significant blockage. Svoogs tend to have larger strictures.

Real spinal stenosis can affect urination. But spinal disc disease that compresses a nerve is more likely to affect urination. When you took the steroid your back pain got better. When you took clomid your back pan got better. My guess is you have symptomatic disc issues.
