Still a lot of momentum and support to "start something" related to health and data.

Disrupting health in a big way is interesting bc there is delivery of care and there is data. Unlike others (uber, airbnb) there isn't excess capacity.

The disruption i think is in the price/cost. All the data is public and knowable (requires data crunchers). So is the certification data

So in the same way I networked all the bank offices and all the transaction data around operational that could also be done for the USA health care system.

The companies doing it now only do for the hospitals themselves - no one does for consumer and that's what's missing.
