MasterCard and visa are paying big acquisition costs. What is partly paid by them (free access using using your Visa Pin) and then part

In slums very easy to set up bc it's just line of site technology and the slum dwellers protect it like crazy

Then would sell to Facebook or whoever. Would have huge penetration. Steve says it's about 25k in infrastructure costs per slum. And they all have Smart phones

My friend Alan Knott Craig started a non profit to do this in South Africa but I would make this for profit in 10 African countries. Would take about 3-6 months to set up of all went well.

Well the reason is interesting is bc everyone trying to get this market. So then you have access to MasterCard wallet and free wifi (if you sign in MasterCard) and MasterCard has an exclusive deal w Apple pay too.

But mostly what you get is easy access and networked access to a huge segment of the population no one knows how to reach.

Facebook would buy

It's a subsidized "free wifi" where everyone makes money and poor ppl get access and the model is the same everywhere - only change is the telco partner and the geography/political climate

I think MasterCard and visa pay pretty steep acquisition costs per customer in this segment and last month with the world bank they committed to reaching 500 million ppl by 2020. This helps them.

Worth it? I don't think i will get a lot of opportunities to do something "big" and want to pick the right one.

Not sure I could do in my spare time but I could start in my spare time.

On DAF he says everything is set legally and you were totally exactly right on all the structures but now it requires a lot of money to be raised and no one can do that (in the amount he wants) except him. He says he can't focus on it right now so he's putting it on ice for another year or so.

We talked about the physics of wifi and then a lot about the idea of free wifi - how to. Make it free for consumers and who would pay and public vs private good. He's like YOU SHOULD DO THAT. Haha
