What's driving global growth? Insight from the London Summit

Willem Buiter of Citibank gives his predictions for the global economy. With him are Ann Cairns of MasterCard (center) and moderator Gillian Tett of the Financial Times.

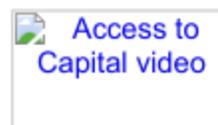

The third time had a special charm. The Institute's invitation-only London Summit, held at the spectacular Heron Tower, brought together nearly 1,000 participants from all corners of the globe. Speakers included former U.K. Prime Minister Tony Blair, Apollo's Leon Black and UBS' Alexander Friedman. Panels at the third annual Summit focused on solutions to some of the world's most urgent challenges, including how the billions of dollars on corporate balance sheets can unlock growth in emerging markets.

Institute will work with Blair, Rwanda on best practices to drive investment

How can we stimulate growth and improve living standards in fast-growing economies around the world? That was the topic of a roundtable last week in New York, where speakers included Tony Blair, former prime minister of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the founder of the Tony Blair Africa Governance Initiative; Paul Kagame, president of the Republic of Rwanda; Strive Masiyiwa, chairman and founder of Econet Wireless; Seth Merrin, chairman of the Access to Global Capital Initiative and founder and CEO of Liquidnet; Mike Milken, chairman of the Milken Institute. The roundtable was part of the Milken Institute's Access to Global Capital Initiative, developed in partnership with Liquidnet, which will work together with the Tony Blair Africa Governance Initiative and the government of Rwanda to help identify and implement best practices that accelerate the flow of capital.
