 This Week on Kickstarter

SEPTEMBER 27, 2012

This week's projects are doing a lot with just a little. They transform highway signs into works of public art, living rooms into leather making studios, and the artwork of some "nobodies" into a comics collection meant for everybody.

The Migrating Mural

by Jane Kim

 Category Public Art

 Location Bishop, CA

Art that moves you

Jane Kim likes to paint massive murals of migratory animals along the routes they travel, like the giant blue whale on a coastal California highway billboard or a whooping crane on the side of a barn in rural Texas. The first installment in her Migrating Murals series will see her focusing on a particularly elusive subject: the Sierra Nevada bighorn sheep, which will be the subject of four large-scale paintings spaced across 145 miles of US Highway 395.

Headknife Leather Goods

Headknife Leather Goods

by Bruno Medeiros

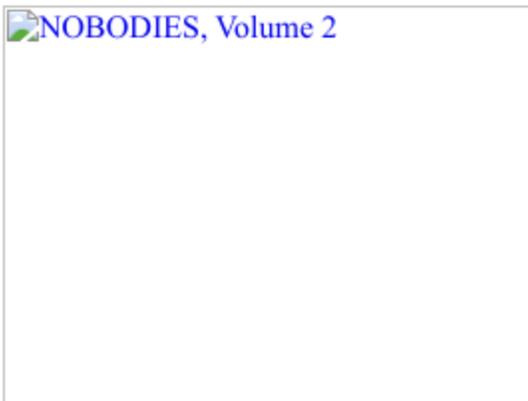

Category Fashion

Location San Jose, CA

Straight to the point

Headknife is the one man leather making operation of Bruno Medeiros, who cranks out handmade leather accessories from his home studio in San Jose, CA. Inspired by the elegantly crafted look of a leather mask he found at a local art fair, Bruno's goods are functional, sturdy, and beautifully made — each is sewn from American-sourced, all natural leather.

NOBODIES, Volume 2

NOBODIES, Volume 2

by Victor Ochoa

Category Comics

Location New York, NY

Something for everybody

Frustrated by his attempts to break into the comic book industry, Victor Ochoa has banded together with a crew of like-minded young artists to create their very own, full color comic book anthology. Brimming with new art and original stories from a global roster of up-and-comers, NOBODIES aims to bring awesome comics to everybody.
