So damn sorry to hear that the owner of Little St James has now acquired the once beautiful island of Great St James. Few of you have flown over to see the ridiculous amount of construction (i.e. destruction) of LSJ, and now with owning GSJ for only about a month it is already full of roads and a heliport. What lies ahead?? I didn't see a single silt fence and I fear for the effects of the runoff on the surrounding coral. Is he not held to the same DPNR rules as the rest of us, or does being rich and owning a private island allow him to do as he wishes to our environment?
