Jonathan Ross I appeared on MSNBC yesterday to discuss my work on a pro-bono case involving Texas' first potential execution since Oklahoma's botched lethal injection of a death row inmate. Hours later the execution was stayed! You can watch the video here:

Attorney prepares client for execution
The U.S. Supreme Court may be the final hope for Robert Campbell as Texas prepares for the first execution since last month's botched execution in Oklahoma. But with the massive storm of controversy surrounding the secrecy of the drugs used in...

Steven Sinofsky Wrote a post on the approaches to pricing your SaaS product. Nothing is more critical to a software-as-a-service (SaaS) business than pricing strategy. Pricing is the moment of truth for a new product ... and doubly so when it is a company's first product. But far more often than not, I've observed new startups leaving "money on the table" when it comes to pricing enterprise products. I've seen founders say their product saves hundreds of thousands of dollars — yet their product is priced as if it's only saving thousands of dollars.
