Connolly has a history of not delivering or of delivering unreliable stuff that can't be used. A letter to a lawyer saying keep me posted, sounds more lazy than aggressive. Having said that, it's easier to get away with unverified crap in a book than it is in a big magazine. Also, as I think I mentioned to you, I heard something about Connolly doing the research for a book that will be authored by someone else. I heard James Patterson, which would mean the book would have massive sales. (Patterson is a new type of publishing--he's a bestselling crime brand, with a variety of crime books sold under his name; up till now, it's been mostly fiction, but I heard they're trying to expand to "real life" crime.). Anyway, you should get a handle on this. It would be good to have someone call Connolly--perhaps this lawyer?--and get the basic background: whose the publisher, what's the prospective pub date, etc. At broken record risk, you can certainly count on Connolly or somebody coming back to bite you, and ought to be planning for it, defensively and otherwise.

When are you back in town? I'm here till Sept 1 then in Europe for a couple of weeks. Back the 16th. m

Thanks for taking the time to speak with me this afternoon. I am a writer for Vanity Fair magazine and I am writing a book on Jeffrey Epstein.

Please keep me posted on the status of your case against Mr. Epstein for your client MR. Jean Luc Brunel. All the best, John Connolly
