my concern is that the number of articles is growing and NONE include the yale report or the other side separate from a woody denial. no upside in not trying to step the tide.

We haven't gotten a new chef. We're trying a new one out. I don't think you want to be around for the tryouts. :-) Not that you would know the difference. I'm talking to someone who serves lukewarm food.

Regarding Soon Yi writing a piece: this is a card to play later. Right now the atmosphere is too toxic and Lynch mob and laying low seems better strategy. The bombs have been crashing for the most part, all around me and many people are getting blasted but the truth is I have actually been persecuted a bit less, not included in pieces that talk about the high profile harassers who keep emerging and I have managed to stay out of Times pieces for awhile and the New Yorker and while I'm still an unfair target, it was more prominent a month ago. This not to say I'm still not attacked but it has diminished and when this whole nightmare simmers down and my side can be heard, we will take some action to correct public opinion. Right now no one is listening, they're just prowling for victims to crush.

understood. its just that the ever increasing chatter is a rallying cry for people to take action. boycott etc. without having a voice pointing out the differences. you can handle the personal attacks , its the attack on your works that are now becoming more vocal

Lord knows what is holding me back other than fear. Just having lived through years with them. World Bank re-election of Jim had nothing to do with me. Did nothing wrong and wasn't accused of wrong. Gossip surrounding politics isn't new and I'm not first person or last caught in cross fire. I understand the nature of politics. The foundation was a 16 year run. I left before I left work at Bank and they were very kind and generous. I was not fired. We looked at roles I could do and none of them seemed like useful or fun. Philanthropy just not for me, at least in the way it grew. My record there is strong.

I have always maintained my medical skills to allow me to have a place to be and participate. I dont think it is slinking away and actually I enjoy it quite a lot. I would like to do more in science and feel like i sort of got bait and switched by joining philanthropy. The initial idea was to grow and scale new ideas and yes i did ru that team but the new ideas weren't science (health isn't medicine...or tech) as I was promised but more broadly about other things in development. But that's ok I learned a lot and had a great time. It just wasn't what I thought or hoped. But I dont want to fall into that trap again. My skills and interests aren't in poverty or development. And I dont enjoy politics. They never have happy endings for anyone.

If I go on the offensive for being attacked and mistreated by b then my life goes off track again. For zero upside other revenge.

The legal system may provide justice for me but the exposure will be gross. Can't do anonymously and it just feels gross to me.

Can't really do behind closed doors because it seems illegal. Like textbook extortion to say I was wronged please make it right. Temporarily he might give me like 50,000 or some small contract or something silly but behind closed doors larry and his wife will then start bashing me from every direction. That doesn't feel like a win at all. So yes i feel stuck.

There is no upside other than knowing i was right. Yes. I have a "blue dress" emails and a few other embarrassing things and yes the stories are so eerily similar to all in media that he sounds weinsteinlike. I cant be the only one.

But next for me is more important than last. It is difficult to conceptualize where I would fit. Not politics. Not corporate. Yes science.

I feel like I have two years of runway. First as an endovascular doc but second as a rockefeller fellow.
