It goes haywire because it's the product of a relational and embodied process . Nothing ( no thing ) exists by itself !
Buddha " we are inter beings in the inter- is- ness . There is only the inter - is - ness.
To separate the biological organism from the environment is a human construct . It's a unified single process
The air is also your breath , the earth recycles as your body , the oceans are your circulation , the light of the stars is your vision , the trees are your lungs and all sentient beings are your food and life blood .
We hang out with sentient beings of our own kind for sensory stimulation and to reproduce and experience sensual and sexual delight
But these are words invented by us to describe experiences.
They can never adequately describe reality

The map is not the territory
Btw ask Gromov to look up Alfred Korzybski
