sorry.. I was on the light rail in phoenix after doing a tv show.. will try you.. btw, here is my favorite email story of the day.. i do make a difference.. <ss type="smile">:)</ss> I have a seven year old son who loves to watch your videos. He is off the charts academically, but has trouble communicating - he speaks English as if he he were learning it as a second language without ever having learned a first. He goes to a Montessori school, which is good, since he can lose himself inthe academics and insulate himself from the social side of traditional school life. When he was four, he taught himself to speak more fluently by watching videos of President Obama. Now, he is fixated on watching the Unbelievers. I saw this come into action when his teacher (a muslim woman who covers completely in hijab) took his class to the Perot Science Museum (we live in Dallas) and hurried the children past any exhibit pertaining to evolution. Rohan, my little budding scientist, absolutely refused to ignore those lessons, and insisted that he be allowed to view the whole museum. When his teacher asked where he learned about these things, he replied, "Lawrence Krauss." As a class chaperone, I was floored. I was on his side, certainly, in exposing the children to every aspect of the museum, but was having to mentally prepare myself for an argument. I am not very scientifically literate, you see - while I am a big fan of science, I am a professional violinist, which I am sure is a different kind of string theory. I owe you thanks - you have interested my son in something that I wish I knew more about, and I am much more confident in his ability to deliver questions to a teacher in whom I have little in common. - Jennifer
