Was hoping to have some time to talk to you about strategy for leaving and making transition out - like what actually to do - MasterCard could be director (full time) or fellow or even a JV project w them. Could also try to build around a FINTECH idea w support from folks like Marc andreeseen and push to Africa. Could do some real science across SRI and Stanford (science for noninvasive biopsy = no more biopsy = probably Nobel prize and at least a TED talk). Or could work on just health at Msft. Or try to get Larry Summers to help me w Sheryl Sandburg and a job at Facebook. Dunno.

Help me get this right. I want to make money and don"t see it clearly. Willing to take another step or two to figure it out but need to be thoughtful. Those are options as I see them but one big question...

Is it ok to take a few months break without a real job (between stuff) or does that look too fake and will it be too hard?

Options (for no break) include:

1. My own startup
2. Senior fellow or current role back at gates foundation till sept 2016
3. Stay at world bank till 2016
4. Senior fellow or director role at MasterCard in NYC
5. Adjunct faculty at Stanford or Stay at Johns Hopkins

Could do a few of these at once but would very much like to move towards a profitable next asap

Melinda wants me out of gates - so I've got one more year on contract maximum to sept 2016.

Own start up seems like only way to make any money at all? Otherwise an limited to salary forever.

MasterCard has fellows that help drive strategies and business lines. It's sort of a way to stay in the game not full time - or full time. They loved the idea I had about taking the retail credit to a wholesale level in Africa since it reaches audience they want. They offered to do a JV with me, buy me or help me build company.

Could also consider:

1. Microsoft trying to build more in health space but super worthless and not great products team or public interest

2. I could ask Larry S to introduce me to Sheryl (she knows me through Jim but won"t remember me)

3. Could do what Steve does for Marc Andreeseen and advise on health and science stuff (Marc is pushing me to be a founder and start a company)
